

(with the "young" Balázs Gulyás and Eörs Szathmáry...)

Csaba is a cognitive psychologist with a strong inclination towards linguistics. He is the founder of Central and Eastern Europe's first cognitive science department and is a prolific author in numerous languages with a keen interest in various fields of psychology, including the history of psychology, the psychology of language (with special regard to language acquisition and language processing, typologically specific models for language, sentence understanding, comparative psycholinguistics, spatial systems and language) and cognitive development and its impairments (with special regard to Williams syndrome and SLI children).

Csaba has been a professor at the universities of Szeged and Budapest (Eötvös Loránd University and the University of Technology and Economics), and at Indiana University, Bloomington; visiting professor at the universities of Trieste, Vienna, Rutgers and Columbia; visiting scholar in the institutes of advanced studies at Stanford, Lyon and Vassenaar. Recently he is a professor emeritus of cognitive science at the Central European University, Budapest.
